Do Teachers Work?

Among the popular fallacies that gain too great a prominence with most people of the present day is that pernicious and abominable idea that the teachers' profession is an easy calling to which one resorts because too lazy to engage in any manual labor. The person who says that school teaching is an easy occupation, in which the teacher floats on "flowery beds of ease" during the school term, either has never tried it, or expresses his opinion about a subject on which he is awfully ignorant. All sensible men will agree that continued mental labor is more exhaustive than continued manual labor. Forty-five hours spent in a week digging into the brains of stupid children, is just about as hard work as the same amount of time expended in digging into the earth. We have tried both, and we know whereof we speak.

We are aware that there are many who wile away their patrons' time in apparent idleness, but the teacher who does his duty in the fullest sense of that term, works hard for his wages, and he is certainly worthy of his hire. There is work, earnest, hearty labor, in the teacher's calling, just as in any other, and we submit that no profession should be judged by the drones it unfortunately drags along with it.

The teacher has a hard road to travel. If the people would take the pains to understand thoroughly the teachers' work, the many difficulties under which he labors, the many trying ordeals through which he passes, the many "red hot ploughshares" on which he has to walk, there would be more mutual interest between parents and instructors, and less carping about the laziness of teachers, and the leisure they enjoy.

Away with such silly twaddle, and say something sensible when you do presume to criticize our profession. Remember that it is in the hands of the schoolmaster, humble and trivial though his work may be in your estimation, that the destinies of this country are placed. His silent influence is simply incalculable, and will be felt when these croakers are dead, buried and forgotten. Glorious thought!

TEACH your children religion, not sectarianism, but that broad principle of religion that is the very seed of genuine godliness. Morality is essential, but morality without religion is as impossible as fruit without stem or branch. All the power and force of morality come from religion alone. There is no sectarianism in true religion. Here is our religious code: "Fear God and keep his commandments"—love our neighbors as ourselves, do good to all men, be honest, upright and faithful in the performance of every known duty. This teaching will not hurt any denomination; it includes that which is best in all of them. It is the very essence and soul of that which makes the church glorious.

If time is money, it would certainly be a great pecuniary advantage to adopt a national mode of spelling and language. At least one-fourth the time now occupied in obtaining a good English education could be saved. "If English could be written as pronounced 720 hours in six years of primary instruction could be saved." Would it not pay to reform?

PARENTS have no right to direct the teacher in his work in the school-room. The teacher has no right to direct parents in reference to what they should do with their children out of school hours. They have no business to interfere with any thing pertaining to the work of instruction, or the order of the school room. Here the teacher is sovereign.

HAVE you ever received anything like this: "Mist'ar —, please Excuse Minny for She was helping me She is a grate help to me thou Small she may be" I would miss her if the gude Lord should call her at any time and oblige. Mrs. R."

How is that for high?

HEAVEN must begin in our own hearts or it will be no heaven for us. Until man allows the spirit of love and truth to enter his own soul and make an inward heaven can do him any good.

MEN must not only pray that God would help them, but they must make an effort to help themselves; God answers prayers in such a way as to encourage the performance of duty, not to neglect it.

If you should take to yourself a little of the good advice you are willing to give to others, it would do no harm.
